General Comment

A rule to reduce fees and conflicts of interest between brokers and investors is a good thing. But the rule as written has a fatal flaw.

Not allowing individuals who direct their own retirement accounts through an online brokerage account to use options and or all the currently available tools necessary to properly manage their account is completely unacceptable and downright wrong!

I have diligently learned to properly trade options and use leverage to reduce risk in my retirement account and absolutely insist that and all the tools currently available remains available for me in my own self-directed retirement account.
